THE SECOND THOREAU-HIS LIFE AT WALDEN POND. Emerson, near Concord, Massachusetts, has been giving some account of his life, and the expenses attending it. Thoreau, in his celebrated and charming "Walden," was somewhat vague in many mi-nor pecuniary estimates. The second 'Hermit of Walden" is a New Yorker. He concluded to prove for himself the correct living expenses consequent on stipulated will not exceed thirty thouserted Broadway for Massachusetts, just as winter was closing in, last November. With much blistering of hands, he says, but cheerfulness of temper, he dog into a side nill and constructed a cabin, fin-lishing it in just one week. He lived, meanwhile, on Graham biscuit and "the clean water of Walden." The cabin is light and warm, with earth thrown up against the siding. An intimate friend of the late Mr. Thoreau declares that it is more comfortable than the one in which he lived, in nearly the same s more comfortable than the one in which he lived, in nearly the same spot. The entire cost of the edition was $13.95. The following are the items: $300 sningles, $3:20 pounds of natis, $1.80; old boards and a door with a window in it, $6.51; one old window, 50 cents; labor of one man to help dig, on account of bilsters and a threaened snow storm, $2.26.
